I fear that if we continue to employ the special method of using the machine which we have been using in matters concerning the Japanese-German agreement, we would give a clue to the reading of our future messages. I fear very much that these messages which we are sending back and forth might be particularly susceptible to being read; therefore, I think that we had better adopt a replacement system for this particular subject, and, of course, inform the proper people; and while awaiting the completion of the new set-up, I think we should burn up every document which we possess in connection with the present method of use. Although the additional apparatus which you sent on the Matsu Maru for modifying the machine is indeed very fine, nevertheless, in such an old-style, inefficient safe as we have in this office, there is a danger that an arrangement established with so much trouble would only end in advantage to the enemy. (Our high officials in Europe are much in same position as I with only minor differences.) Therefore, I should like to ask you to send to the high officials concerned safe repositories for storing the machine.

#6. Re your 4.

1. What you say is doubtless true, but if any cipher machine is considered, the possibility of the messages being deciphered continues theoretically, even after the key has been replaced since the messages are extant. So, I cannot see how you can raise the question of changing the keys of the messages concerning the Japanese-German agreement. The real question that we are concerned with is keeping the key secret. So long as the key does not leak out, the Department of Foreign Affairs thinks that these negotiations between us and Germany offer no clue, and even though the machine itself may be known, there is no danger of solution. Since we have so many permutations of the basic keying elements, no entering wedge is afforded to outsiders so far as this special system is concerned. So long as the system does not leak out, considering its great variability and its great number of permutations, I dare say that its security in the future will still be very high. Therefore, I think that the danger which you say you feel in continuing the use of the special key is fanciful indeed.

2. Concerning the matter of a safe for storing the machine, considering its large size and shape, it is extremely hard to provide the same very soon. The machines have not been kept in safes for the last five years. We are considering handling them in the way that the Navy handles its similar machines, but right now, force of circumstances does not permit us to realize this. So I think if you will advise the different high officials in Europe to conform to instructions for the use of the machine, there will not be as much danger as you think. I do not
